FROM AGREEMENT TO ACTION: BUILDING BACK BIODIVERSITY

Natural Resource Management South are working to build back biodiversity at two internationally important wetlands on Tasmania's east coast through improved monitoring and management practices, reducing threats to the wetland and restoring its natural flows.

Moulting Lagoon and Apsley Marshes are Ramsar-listed wetlands that are recognized for their rich diversity of plants (including threatened saltmarsh) and as important habitat for waterbirds and fish.

With the project wrapping up at the end of June, and to celebrate the culmination of the past three years' efforts, NRM South joined project partners and stakeholders for a field day in early May to showcase the completed works. One of the outcomes on display as part of this Australian Government funded project, was the nine hectares of modified drainage that has been restored by project partner Nature Glenelg Trust (NGT) over the past year.

NGT has worked on similar projects across southern Australia and NGT's Mark Bachmann noted that restoring natural water flows in modified wetlands will help the threatened saltmarsh community re-establish and improve the overall health of the system.

'Historical modifications to these wetlands, such as the construction of levee banks and drainage channels, had changed the way water moved through the landscape,' Mark explained. 'This was having negative impacts on saltmarsh health, including the plants and animals that rely on this habitat. We have been grateful to the local community who have provided us with insights into how the wetland looked in the past, which helped us plan the restoration works and has resulted in the return of natural flows to this significant area for the first time.' Across the wetlands, 114 hectares of saltmarsh habitat is now being positively influenced by the hydrological restoration works, well in excess of the project target of 64 hectares.

Field day attendees also checked on some saltmarsh species plantings that have been carried out by the Tasmanian Land Conservancy (TLC) to assist natural regeneration and learned more about the camera trapping that TLC and the Tasmanian Aboriginal Centre has been doing to monitor wildlife – including feral species. NRM South's Laurel McGinnity, who has been leading the project, was delighted by both the success of the field day as well as the overall support she has seen from local landholders, project partners, committee members, contractors, consultants and community members.

'This work could not have been completed without their input and support,' she emphasized. 'Although this project is wrapping up soon, these wetlands are a priority for funding and investment under the Southern Tasmanian Regional Strategy. We hope to continue working with key stakeholders to build on the significant achievements that have been completed over the past three years.'

This project is supported by NRM South through funding from the Australian Government's National Landcare Program.

EVDS INTRODUCTION

MAST will introduce the Electronic Visual Distress Signal (EVDS) – a new way of safety – in July this year.

EVDS devices are an alternative to hand-held flares which all boats should carry within their safety gear requirements.

An EVDS is both handheld and non-toxic to the user, which provides:

- The emission of a white light that meets certain intensity requirements;
- Be capable of automatic signalling S-O-S for at least 3-5 times per minute for 6 hours
- Contain an independent power source –

batteries

- Float with the lens surface at or above the surface of the water
 - Be equipped with a waterproof switch
- The benefits for the Tasmanian boating community and their passengers is that an EVDS can be tested before you go out on the water – which you can't do with the traditional flare. An EVDS will emit its signal for six hours - hand flares only burn for around 1 minute. If boaters purchase an EVDS, they will also have to equip their vessels with both a VHF radio and GPS-registered EPIRB device. These two items will allow daytime rescue capabilities as the light from an EVDS is not evident during daylight.

We believe this will make all the Tasmanian recreational boating community safer through daylight hours should an emergency arise on the water.

Currently there is only one standard available worldwide for EVDS device - this is the RTCM 13200.00 which was developed by the Radio Technical Commission for Maritime Services. An Australian Standard is being developed and is expected to be published in 2024.

It is important to remember that an EVDS will not be compulsory once new legislation is in place.

EVDS devices are an option to replace the four, handheld flares currently required in sheltered waters and offshore.

As mentioned, if a boat owner buys an EVDS, they must also install a GPS-enabled EPIRB registered with AMSA and a VHF radio. EPIRB's and VHF radios are already a requirement in coastal waters.

In coastal waters, the EVDS can be carried instead of the four, handheld flares and parachute flares must still be carried when in coastal waters.

We believe that in sheltered waters, an EVDS, EPIRB and VHF radio will give people in distress a better chance of rescue as opposed to relying just on hand flares.

The EPIRB and VHF give you an opportunity to get the message out that you are in distress. With pyrotechnic flares, you are relying on someone seeing you, remembering they only last for a minute.

The other issue that concerns modern boaters is disposing of out-of-date pyrotechnic flares.

MAST has worked with Councils across Tasmania to establish dedicated disposal points for out-of-date flares. So far, we have collected 45 full bins – more than 10,000 flares which otherwise may have ended up in landfill.

New technology must be embraced and the implementation of EVDS technology will lead to safer boating for all Tasmanians.

NEW SWANSEA COMMUNITY SUPPORT INITIATIVE

You may have noticed a community hamper box placed in our two IGA Swansea stores. These are part of a pilot scheme to help out families who may need that little extra by way of food coming into the household. Shoppers are asked to spare a thought for others by donating items and placing them into the bins provided.

The focus is on non-perishable food stuffs such as rice, canned goods and fish, tea, coffee, pasta, dried foods; spreads etc. while items such as toothpaste and detergent will also be accepted. Goods received will be collected and redistributed locally on a weekly basis.

IGA has kindly agreed to support the initiative by providing suitable receptacles in both its Swansea stores.

If the project is successful it will continue throughout the year.

VIRTUOSI TASMANIA WELCOMES SHEFALI PRYOR!

Virtuosi Tasmania is thrilled to present a concert of music for oboe and string trio (violin, viola and cello) in three venues around the state:

11.00am Friday May 26 at Home Hill Winery, Ranelagh
2.00pm Sunday May 28 at LifeWay Baptist Church, Devonport
2.00pm Sunday June 4 at Portland Memorial Hall, St Helens

The concerts will feature the new Principal Oboe of the Tasmanian Symphony Orchestra, Shefali Pryor, performing the striking Phantasy Quartet by Benjamin Britten and Mozart's joyful quartet in F major. Both quartets are scored for oboe, violin, viola and cello, and Shefali will be joined by members of the Tasmanian String Quartet, Jennifer Owen, violin, Douglas Coghill, viola and Jonathan Békés, cello. The program will be completed by a performance of Ernő Dohnanyi's Serenade for string trio.

Shefali grew up in Sydney, studying oboe at the Sydney Conservatorium of Music with Professor Sharman Pretty and Alexandre Oguey, and later with Stefan Schilling at the Universität Mozarteum Salzburg. She has held the position of Associate Principal Oboe with the Sydney Symphony Orchestra since 2005, and now teaches at the Sydney Conservatorium, and tutors young musicians through the Australian Youth Orchestra in various programs.

She has performed extensively as guest Principal across Australia, including the Australian Chamber Orchestra, Melbourne and West Australian Symphony Orchestras, and the Australian World Orchestra. As soloist she has appeared with Sydney, Melbourne, Tasmanian and Canberra Symphony Orchestras, and as a chamber musician she has joined the Australia Ensemble, Sydney Soloists and staff of the Sydney Conservatorium.

The Tasmanian Symphony Orchestra appointed Shefali as Principal Oboe in 2022. When she is not playing her oboe, teaching or making reeds, Shefali enjoys hiking and camping, which makes her Tasmanian appointment a perfect match. Virtuosi Tasmania looks forward to presenting her in three beautiful concerts. We invite you to join us to hear her glorious music making, and to stick around after the performance to welcome her in person!
